Dedication

On November 24, 1953, Northwestern State college dedicated its mammoth, new fieldhouse and physical education plant, the most modern in the state of Oklahoma. In this building Northwestern students will be taught how to develop and maintain healthy bodies with the most modern facilities, and they will be able to enjoy actual and vicarious intercollegiate athletic competition under the most healthful conditions.

Schools, colleges, and universities serve our nation, growing to meet its growing needs, growing in size and ability to give more of our people the knowledge they need to build a better life--to build and keep a better nation. This implies that the education students receive will be geared to equip them in a bewilderingly modern world. To accomplish this, education must be modern, administered through modern facilities.

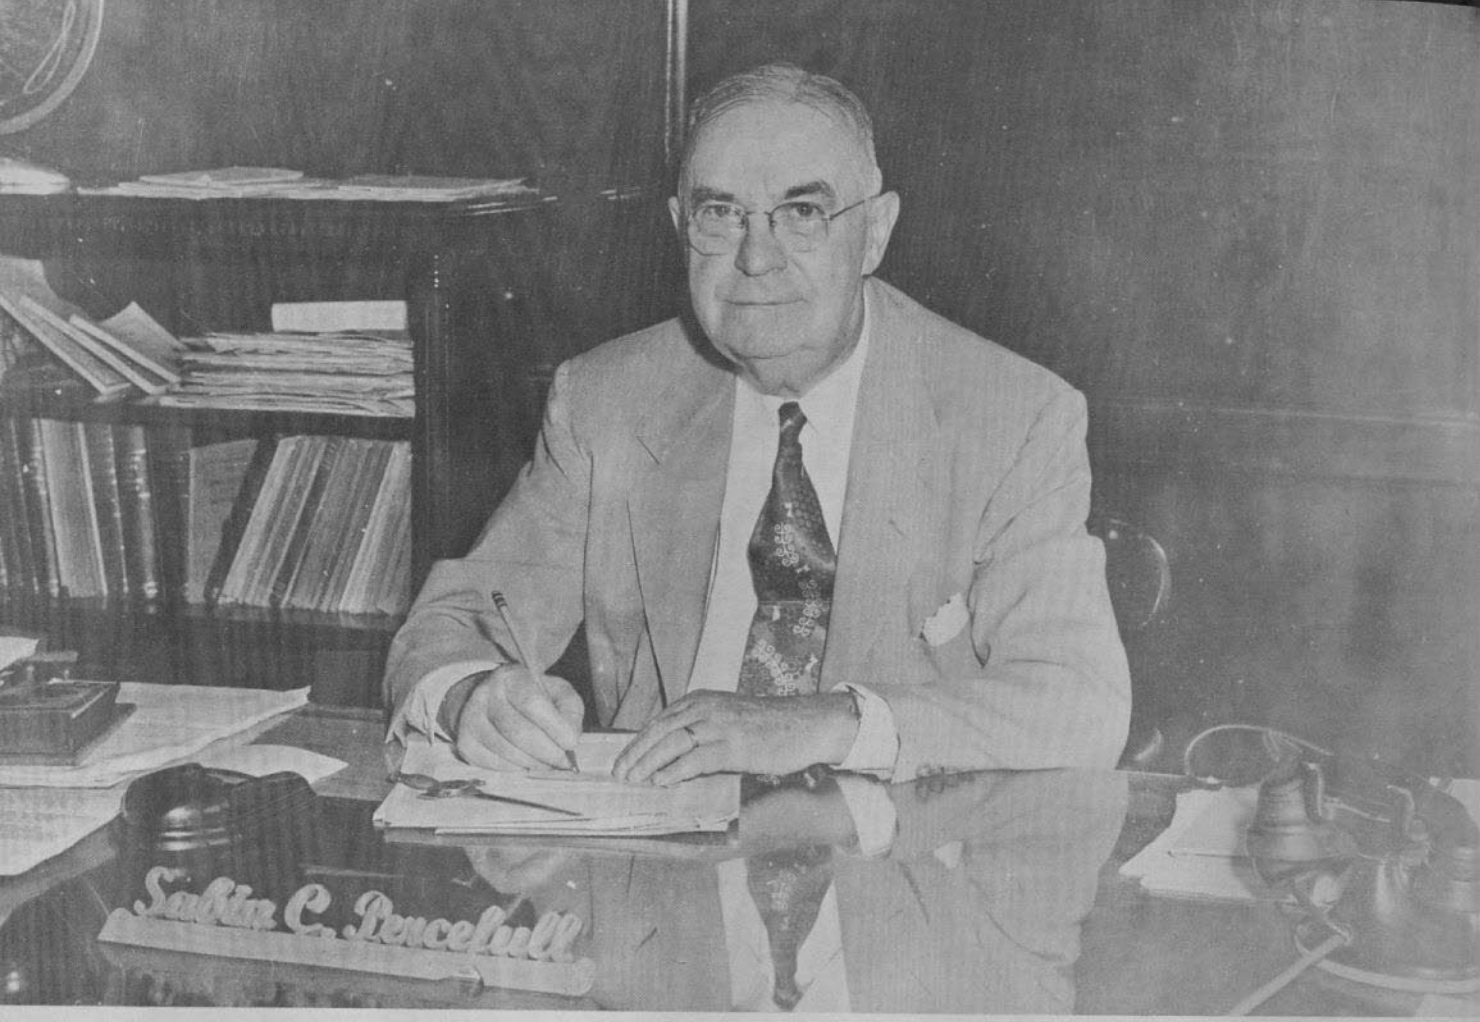

It is to the new fieldhouse, emblematic of modern education through modern facilities, that we dedicate the 1953-54 Ranger annual.

GREETINGS!

The teacher training institutions of the state of Oklahoma during the early days of statehood were probably adequate for those days. Since that time many new problems have arisen; there has been great scientific progress. Nations of the earth are closer together in terms of transportation and communication than they ever were before. It has become necessary for the colleges of the state to progress along with the advancement in science, literature, industry, and the arts.

There was a time when graduation from high school was accepted for teacher certification. The time came when a Bachelor's Degree was required in Oklahoma and finally the Master's Degree has become the goal of most public school teachers. This year the Oklahoma State Regents of Higher Education authorized the Oklahoma State Colleges, of which Northwestern is one, to offer a Master of Teaching Degree.

Along with the progress in curricula and teacher certification have gone improvements in the physical facilities of these institutions. Northwestern has recently dedicated a more modern and ample Health and Physical Education Building and is now in the process of constructing a modern Natatorium. This college will soon undertake to construct a student center where Wyatt Gymnasium now stands.

The faculty members of this institution have constantly been upgraded so that many faculty members have Doctors' Degrees and nearly all of those who do not have the Doctorate have sixty or more graduate hours.

The progress of the college is consonant with that made in the scientific and industrial world.

DEAN

A relative newcomer to the campus, Dean Leslie L. Thomason's energetic versatility and graciousness have won him the respect of Northwesterners and Alvans.

Dean of Women, Myrna Boyce, is known among Northwestern students as a sympathetic counselor and as one of the most inspirational of lecturers.

C. E. Campbell, dean of student affairs, is valued adviser to both administration and students because of his astuteness and his 29 years of experience at Northwestern.

Northwestern State's marching band. They strut their stuff on homecoming day.

Gene Kirkham, drum major from Enid, Okla., has helped plan and organize formations and on a number of occasions he has been entrusted with the responsibility of directing the band by Professor Kenneth Fite, band director.

These majorettes, Rose Darr and Leta Jo Millege, added glamor to the formations of the snappy Ranger marching band.

This shot of the drum major and majorettes appeared in several nationally circulated music and band magazines.

SHOCKLEY HALL

Shockley Hall has for some time been the second home for many girls as they have passed through their college days at Northwestern. It has always housed a studious and fine looking bunch of girls and this year is no exception. Mrs. Lennie Heasley, the house mother, and proctor Carol Hunter, keep them quieted down when it is curfew time, because like all girls they like to have their fun when they are supposed to be on their best behavior. And when it comes to being ladies when they want to it is hard to find their equal.

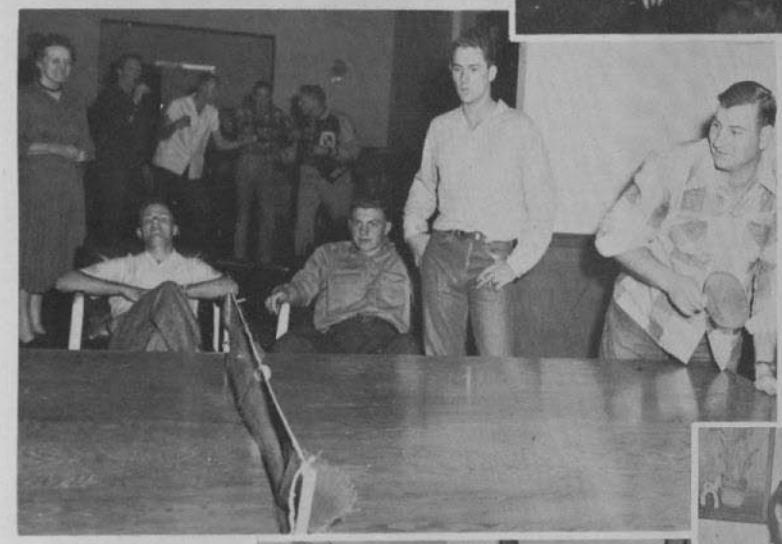

The building was first put into use in 1939. There is a large dining room in the basement. The building will accommodate 130 women. Much of the social life of the college centers in the dormitory where there is an attractive parlor to provide settings for receptions, teas, and parties. The building is of brick and concrete construction, fireproof and thoroughly modern in every particular.

VINSON HALL

At right is a large number of the boys who live in the halls and rooms of the dorm. In their midst is the house mother, Mrs. Calhoun, who makes sure (or tries to) that the boys don't set off any fireworks without being detected. She is aided by Proctor Jim Stringer.

At left: Duane Goyen drives back an opponents serve into the net as unconcerned rooters look on. In the background two other boys stage a fight for the camera.

Below: The officers and proctor Jim Stringer inspect the television set in their off-school hours.

Glen Painter takes it easy (as usual) in his room on the second floor of the dormitory.

Men of various skills--carpenters, electricians, engineers, drivers, custodians--are these above.

To some of these men it is a daily chore to clean up and resuscitate Northwestern's buildings and campus after the students have done their worst. So it seems only fitting that they bring up the rear in the annual and do their best to salvage the mess we've made here.
